

The Grateful Dead

Friend Of The Devil (1970)

What a long, strange trip it's been. The Grateful Dead started out as a bluegrass band called Mother McCree's Uptown Jug Champions. They became the house band at Ken Kesey's Acid Tests and changed their name to The Grateful Dead. In 1970 they put out the album, American Beauty, concentrating more on songs than some of their earlier psychedelic records. This song is a road story - a hitchhiking journey of the early 70s counter-culture about some who lit out from Reno and was trailed by 20 hounds.

Beck

Devils Haircut (1996)

The Devil always looks sharp. One of the reasons he look sharp is because he has a good haircut. This is from Beck's hit album, Odeleay, produced by The Dust Brothers.

Beck says, "This song is a really simplistic metaphor for the evil of vanity. I just thought you could dance to it."

Elvis Costello & The Attractions Radio Radio (1978)

Elvis got banned from Saturday Night Live for 12 years when he played this song. He didn't think the song he was supposed to play would connect with an American audience.

Instead, he played Radio Radio, a song he had just written, that he thought had more meaning. He was bitin' the hand that fed him.

Bing Crosby
Brother Can You Spare
A Dime (1932)

Bing Crosby, one of the most influential singers in the 20th Century. He changed the way we listen to singers. Before him singers had to belt it out, being able to sing over a large band in a concert hall. The emerging microphone technology allowed Bing to add a level of subtlety, nuance and insinuation. Brother Can You Spare A Dime was written by Jay Gorney and Yip Harburg. Yip also worked with Harold Arlen on a lot of the songs on The Wizard Of Oz.

Emmylou Harris
Hobo's Lullaby (1980)

A song written by Goebel Reeves, who grew up middle class but became a hobo known as the Texas Drifter. And sometimes he was known as the Yodelling Rustler. He must have wanted to get caught.

George Jones
Good Year For The Roses
(1970)

George Jones once had to drive down the freeway on his riding lawnmower. His wife, Tammy Wynette, was sick of his constant drinking. She emptied the house of liquor, she took away his car keys and made him a virtual prisoner in an attempt to wean him off the booze. One afternoon, alone in the house, George wanted a drink. The house was quite a distance from Nashville - too far to walk. So George hopped on the only vehicle he still had the keys to. You could see George heading down the side of the highway, going towards the liquor store on his riding lawnmower...
